

Historical Stick Figure Animation Masterclass

Analyse

Analyse the title patterns, hook structures, and script formats across these videos. Give me a 1-paragraph summary of what makes these videos work — format, episode length, POV style, pacing, and story arc.

Topic

Using the same title format and script structure as these videos, write 5 viral title options for a new interesting episode. Keep them direct, search-friendly, and matched to the channel's pattern. I'll choose the winner, then you write the entire script.

Script

Write the full 1-minute script for "[1]" using the same pacing, structure, and immersive first-person POV voice as the existing You Are History videos. Open on a strong hook. Keep the weird historical detail without losing accessibility.

Reference Image

Lock the reference image I attached as a reference style. It is a 2D webcomic cartoon style, flat colors, thick black outlines, simple hand-drawn characters, expressive faces, minimal shading, humorous educational illustration, clean vector-like artwork.

Scenes

Break this script into 8-second video scenes.

And before anything, I want one character reference prompt to lock in the character then,

For each scene, give me TWO prompts in this exact order — IMAGE first, VIDEO second — both obeying the locked style. Format per scene:

SCENE [number] — [short label]

IMAGE PROMPT:

[locked style] + subject + action + background detail + character position + expression + framing (wide/medium/close) + light direction + time of day. The character stays simple and flat; the background carries the detail.

VIDEO PROMPT:

same scene as a moving shot. State ONE camera move (slow push-in / gentle pan / static with parallax) and ONE subtle motion (cape sways, clouds drift, fire flickers). Keep motion minimal. End every video prompt with: "consistent character design, flat 2D animation, no morphing, no extra characters." Keep [FIGURE]'s face, proportions, and palette identical across all scenes.
